Woe to those who call evil good and good evil; who substitute darkness for light and light for darkness.

One of the hardest things for a human being to accept is change. Resistance to change is a well-documented fact. Once you have accepted something as “truth”, it is very difficult for you – regardless of well-documented evidence to the contrary – to admit that what you have believed “as truth” was actually a “lie”. In fact, most of you will more often than not prefer to continue believing the “lie” than to change. This resistance to change is described as the reluctance of adapting to something that is different from what you believe.

What motivates people to dig in no matter how unconvincing or illogical their arguments may be? What is it that makes them refuse to change and accept another point of view that is contrary to their presently held viewpoint? Especially when their viewpoint coincides with the popular mainstream narrative that is out there? Is it part of the mob mentality? Or is it the human proclivity towards the “Don’t rock the boat syndrome”? As a group they “cruise down the river on a Sunday afternoon” unaware of the dangerous waterfall ahead, shouting insults at those going in the opposite direction and ignoring their warnings of the impending doom.

We are living in the time of the great divide. Seldom has there been a time of greater polarity of opinions. With no lack of propaganda – especially from the left – seeking to force everyone into accepting their narrative as the only acceptable one. Should you refuse to do so or dare to present an opposing argument they will hysterically upbraid you with threats and insults, or persecute you by getting you fired from your job or banned from social media platforms.

This in itself is probably the main reason why so many ‘intelligent’ people refuse to become involved in the debate. They know what is ‘right’ and they know what is ‘wrong’ - common sense informs them. However, fear of being ostracised or losing their livelihood prevents them from becoming involved. While they, like the proverbial ostrich, stick their heads in the ground, in the real world the economic, political and social structures are crumbling ready to fall.

When that happens the New World Order cabal – headed up by the most narcissistic and inhumane group of people in the world – stand ready to fill the void. Under their diabolical and callous rule, everything you have believed in or owned will be lost. Taken from you by the very ones you acquiesced to under threats and compulsion. According to them ‘you will own nothing but you will be happy’. What does that actually mean? It means that all the rights enshrined in chapter two of the South African Constitution will be taken away from you. For a list of freedoms you will no longer ‘own’ I suggest you get yourself a copy of the Constitution of the Republic of South Africa 1996 and carefully read chapter 2 articles 1-25.

If you have never done this before and are doing it right now ask yourself - what you have done in the past to ensure that your rights are not being trampled on. Well you may say many of these constitutional rights have already been trampled on through legislation that has been passed by the ANC government, often with consent from so-called opposition parties. The ANC government are continually putting through amendments to existing laws and legislating new ones, which are in contradiction of the ‘spirit’ of the Constitution. The reason they are getting away with it is the ‘silent majority’. Are you a part of the ‘silent majority’? Why not make a quality decision to become a part of the ‘active minority’ that are working to encourage others to become the ‘involved majority’.

If you are neglecting to resist what has been planned for your future, ask yourself why you are resisting? Is it because you are comfortable behind your high fences, or is it because you are afraid it might cost you something? Alternately, is it because you just can’t be bothered? Well, then whatever happens in the future, is on you.

Carpe Diem is a Latin phrase that literally means 'Pluck the day' or 'seize the day'. If we do it together in reliance upon our Creator and Father God, we, by His Grace could be part of the remnant that will, 'pass safely through these things that are coming upon the face of the earth'.
